British Protect French Troops in Syria

[Reuter and A.P. Reports]

FOLLOWING Britain's intervention in the Levant, as a result of which French troops were ordered to cease fire, General de Gaulle on Saturday made a statement accusing British agents of stirring up trouble, and criticising the manner in which Mr. Churchill had invited France to take part in a London Conference.

De Gaulle alleged that the Syrians had attacked French posts, and this was denied by the Syrian Foreign Minister, who declared: "We have documents dated May 20th and May 26th, proving that the French were preparing a plot to cause trouble in Syria."

British troops arrived in Damascus on Saturday. British tanks and armoured cars surrounded all French barracks, ready to intervene if necessary. All French aircraft in the Levant have been grounded.

A Damascus message last night stated that the 3,000 French troops in the garrison are proceeding to a special camp five miles west of the capital.

According to A.P. the French general who directed the bombing, shelling, mortaring, and machine-gunning of Damascus from Tuesday to Friday morning, General Oliva-Roget, has been dismissed from his command at British request.

The presence of French troops in the barracks of many "key" towns is keeping tension at a high pitch. At Kuneitra, directly south of Damascus, 4,000 Bedouins of the Fadel tribe have entered the town and want to attack the French in the barracks. The British are protecting the French, but the situation is uneasy. Bedouins also entered and badly shot up the town of Hama, where strong British protection was again required for the French.

In answer to a broadcast appeal by Mardam Bey, a number of shops were open yesterday in Damascus. This is the surest indication of returning confidence in the Levant. There is complete calm throughout the Lebanon.

French troops and their families in Syria, at present under the protection of British arms, are being evacuated.

Troop movements in Damascus are being carried out along quiet roads at quiet times, such as the siesta hour, to avoid any demonstrations.

Already French armour has withdrawn to the Mezze area. Meantime the British Military Commission is investigating the alleged shooting of hostages and looting by French troops. One inquiry concerns the death of 19 gendarmes found apparently hastily buried in a fortification trench at Mezze. When the Commission visited the barracks in Damascus, where Circassian troops were quartered, it is stated to have found a considerable quantity of loot.

About 150 officers and men of a British cruiser at present lying off Beirut held a short parade yesterday in Damascus. The salute was taken by Vice-Admiral Tennant, C.-in-C., Levant, accompanied by General Paget, C.-in-C., Middle East. The inhabitants gave the British Navy men an enthusiastic welcome.

DE GAULLE OBDURATE

According to an A.P. message from Paris General de Gaulle, addressing a Press conference, clearly indicated that France would not submit the Syrian question to a tri-partite conference in London, as proposed by Mr. Churchill. He said: "We wish that when we were invited to London we were invited in a manner different from that in which we were asked."

General de Gaulle said that the Levant difficulties had arisen from the British attitude, says Reuter. "The British always said they wanted to let France sail her ship in Syria. Unfortunately, it is too true, they have not done it."

Insisting that the events had an international and not merely a local significance, he asserted that British agents had stirred up agitation against the interests of France.

"Our country overlooked these difficulties," said de Gaulle, "and tried to negotiate, with Syria and Lebanon, treaties settling all questions relating to her considerable cultural and economic interests. In addition, she asked for the right to possess certain bases, such as those which are at the disposal of Britain and the U.S.A.

"General Beynet handed proposals of this nature to the Syrian and Lebanon Governments, but he her was told it was impossible to open negotiations.

"Soon afterwards disturbances broke out, and bands, armed with British weapons, attacked isolated French posts and compelled our forces to retaliate and re-establish order, except in the Djebel Druse, where we had only native troops.

"Such was the situation on the evening of May 30, when the British Government requested the French Government, in a pressing way, to cease fire.

"The French view is that the question might provide an opportunity for international co-operation, as envisaged at San Francisco.

"Deep friendship unites the French and British peoples, but we must finish with dictates and crises. It is by international co-operation that this question must be settled.

"The whole French people are united around the Government to ensure that its interest and dignity be respected, and, if necessary, to enforce that respect."

Jamil Mardam Bey, the Syrian Foreign Minister, speaking in Damascus yesterday, offered full facilities for any international investigation into the French charge that Syrians had attacked French installations.

"During last month," he said, "we frequently warned the French that there would be trouble if they landed more troops, and we have documents, dated May 20th and 26th, proving that the French were preparing a plot to cause trouble in Syria.

"General de Gaulle's statement is obviously intended to cover the French plot.

"French actions recently have put an end to any remaining good relations between Syria and France. The French wanted a privileged position in Syria. They have now got a privileged position — but not the kind they wanted.

"We will not recognise any traditional right to a privileged position in Syria. We are prepared to solve any problems with France on a basis of equality and justice."

Mardam Bey thanked the British people for intervening on behalf of the Syrian people.

He disclosed that the latest estimates of Syrian casualties in Damascus during last week were 400 killed; 100 missing, believed killed, and 500 wounded, of whom 300 or 400 are being treated in their own homes.

In a joint statement last night the Lebanese Prime Minister and the Acting Premier of Syria alleged that the French used Lease-Lend supplies in the fighting in Syria. The accusation said specifically that tanks and guns used against the Arabs were identified as of American manufacture.

The Prime Ministers declared that they "would fight until every single house in our countries is destroyed, and every native killed, in order to keep our independence.

"We will not sign any treaty with France," the statement continued, and urged that Syria and the Lebanon be given Lend-Lease equipment, "to be equal with France—and we will show them who is going to win."

They also charged the French with stealing food, and called upon the British to furnish them with food supplies.

U-Boat for Belfast.—The U-boat, U 1023, will be at Belfast from July 16th to 20th, when the public will have an opportunity of inspecting her.

Mr. Anthony Eden's Illness

The following statement was issued from 10 Downing street, London, yesterday:—

"The Foreign Secretary is suffering from a duodenal ulcer, and, while his general condition is good, he is compelled, on the advice of his doctors, to take at least two weeks' complete rest.

"The Prime Minister will be in charge of the Foreign Office, and, as during Mr. Eden's absence in San Francisco, will be assisted by Mr. Richard Law. The position of Mr. Mabane, the newly-appointed Minister of State, remains unaffected by this temporary arrangement. The Prime Minister will also lead the House of Commons, and will be assisted in this by Mr. Brendan Bracken."

Mr. Eden will be 48 to-morrow week.

Nominations In North To-day

NOMINATIONS for the Northern general election will be received to-day between 10 a.m. and noon. Unless there are unexpected developments, 19 candidates (13 Unionists and 6 Nationalists) will be returned unopposed. This means that there are likely to be contests in 30 divisions. Prospective candidates total 87, of whom 42 are official Unionists. Polling will take place on June 14th.

It is almost certain that in Shankill, Belfast, the official Unionist Party will not oppose Mr. T. Henderson (Independent Unionist), who has indicated his entire agreement with, and support of, Sir Basil Brooke's election manifesto. It is considered likely, however, that Mr. Henderson will be opposed by another Independent Unionist.

Arab Attitude

THE Council of the Arab League meets to-day to discuss the Levant crisis, says a Reuter message from Cairo.

A few days ago there was unofficial talk of breaking off diplomatic relations with France, but Britain's intervention has altered the situation.

Internees' Stories of Japanese Torture

The first British internees—men, women and children—liberated from Japanese concentration camps in Manila arrived at Gourock, Scotland, yesterday, with stories of starvation and torture, says the P.A.

When they stepped ashore from the repatriation ships they told how women and children were slapped and men kicked for disobeying orders. Among them were Elaine Hill and her mother, who are going to Orpington, Kent.

"People could not resist looking skyward when planes were overhead," Miss Hill said, "but if they were American planes, and you were caught looking, you were punished. The favourite punishment was to tie them up and make them look at the blazing sun until they went blind.

Mr. Ronald D. D. Falkner, of Broadway, Wimbledon, who was accompanied by his wife and son, said that when the Americans arrived at Manila the Japanese went completely mad. There were wholesale shootings of innocent people. Germans and Spaniards suffered badly.

Mrs. Elizabeth Davies, Woodhill road, Aberdeen, said that, if orders were obeyed strictly and promptly, things were not too bad.

An American missionary, Dr. Stevenson, was sent to prison for insisting on giving starvation as the cause of death in eight cases.

Soviet Criticism

Moscow Radio last night criticised the War Crimes Conference in London saying that the proceedings so far did not bear out the conclusion that delay was a thing of the past and that some of the suggestions made at the conference came in the category of legal hair-splitting.—(Reuter.)

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION

Mr. de Valera Claims That Democracy Prevails

DURING the week-end there was a spate of speeches in support of the candidates for the Presidential election on June 14th. Extracts from some of the speeches follow.

A vigorous denunciation of the pretence by "a number of foreign newspapers" that a dictatorship had operated in this country for some years past, was made by Mr. de Valera, at a meeting held in Waterford on Saturday night. "I would not mention this at all," he declared, "only that I want to end once and for all this suggestion that is harmful to us in other countries.

"The fact that you can by your vote freely elect any candidate in the forthcoming elections is proof that democracy is working here," he added.

At another meeting which he addressed in Dungarvan yesterday, An Taoiseach said that if they lost the national language, this nation, despite all the sacrifices of the past, would become virtually indistinguishable from an English province.

There had been six general elections since Fianna Fail took office, and yet at the beginning of this campaign they found opponents crying out that this was dictatorship. Fianna Fail had expressed its belief in democratic government by having it inserted in the Constitution.

Continuing, Mr. de Valera said he could not see anything dictatorial in their efforts to get men with the same outlook as the Government elected to the local bodies. He considered it common sense. Similarly why should they support a man for the Presidency who "not having the same views as we have, might in a critical situation block us from doing something which we believed to be in the national interest."

DR. P. McCARTAN

Dr. Patrick McCartan, speaking in Galway, said that when he first decided to go forward for the Presidency his real object was to force the Government to put forward a man on whose election all would agree, such as the outgoing President. If a man of that type had been put forward, he (Dr. McCartan) would have gracefully retired. The office of President was much the same as the position of the president of an arbitration court. If he was to be impartial, he could not be a member of any political party.

Speaking in Ballina yesterday, Dr. McCartan said that when the guns were going, Mr. O'Kelly was in Paris getting £500 a year and expenses. He (the speaker) said that, if elected, he would take a salary of only £5,000 a year and £2,000 expenses. He would spend all the money in the interests of the country. He would use the prestige of the office to promote Gaelic games and industries. He was above all parties, because he held that the interests of Ireland were above any man or party.

GENERAL S. MacEOIN

Dr. O'Higgins, T.D., at Wexford, asked: was it to be written in history that that outstanding Irishman, the hero of Ballinalee, presented himself for election, and the people trampled him in the dust because of party affiliations? He believed that Sean MacEoin was the greatest living Irishman.

General Mulcahy, at Birr, said that, having agreed on the first President, a similar agreement could have been reached now only for the party interests of Fianna Fail, which wanted to grab the amenities as well as the power that lay in the President.

General Sean MacEoin, at Ballyshannon, said that the Presidential election was not a vote of approval or disapproval of any policy or party. There was only one question to decide and that was which candidate was best suited to protect the rights and interests of the people.

MR. S. T. O'KELLY

Mr. Sean Lemass at Sligo—The argument that the holder of the Presidential office should have no political affiliations was nonsensical. "If you read the leading articles in the Irish Times you will find a definition of a non-political candidate. They would confine the selection of such a candidate to those who burned the Tricolour on the roof of Trinity College. That is their definition, and when they urge the absence of politics from the Presidential election they really mean the absence of nationalism.

Mr. Sean MacEntee, at Templemore.—If the Presidential election were to be fought in accordance with the spirit of the Constitution the supporters of the various candidates should concern themselves, not with policies, but with persons, but not, of course, with personalities, for the people were called upon to vote, not for a plan, but for a man.

Speaking at Roscrea, Mr. MacEntee said that the President's powers were the last reserve if the liberties of the people were challenged or the State overthrown, and it was essential to have the right man such as Mr. Sean T. O'Kelly. The provisions of the Constitution in respect of the President were framed to prevent the usurpation of power by persons who might obtain control of the Government.

Mr. Frank Aiken, at Listowel, said that a lot of people throughout the world did not like the stand this country had taken during the war. They would take up the statement that was being made that the election of Mr. O'Kelly would be dictatorship. He hoped that Mr. Mulcahy and others would drop that kind of propaganda. It was a form of blackmail, and they were not going to be blackmailed by Irishmen or foreigners.

Mr. G. Boland, at Maryborough yesterday, said that it did not follow that because they had a President by agreement on the first occasion that it should always occur. Dr. Hyde was an outstanding man, and where could they get anyone else by agreement before Mr. S. T. O'Kelly? It would be a poor tribute to Dr. Hyde to appoint as his successor a man who was not an Irish speaker. Apart from Mr. de Valera himself, the Minister did not think they could get a man more suitable than Mr. O'Kelly.

Grain and Stockings Arrive in Dublin

Over 3,000 tons of grain are included in a cargo of 7,000 tons which has arrived in Dublin on the freighter, San Rosario, after a five-day voyage from Lisbon. There are also 10 cwt. of ladies' fully fashioned silk stockings, 14 cwt. of ladies' hose, 100 tons of cotton piece goods, 541 tons of rice, 60 tons of tapioca, 22 tons of tea, and 200 tons of cocoa beans.

The second large freighter to arrive from Lisbon in a short period, the San Rosario, also carried 200 tons of coffee beans, as well as liquid glucose (15 tons), newsprint (96 tons), cotton seed (110 tons), linseed (140 tons), wood pulp (100 tons), petroleum jelly (18 tons), copra (244 tons), worsted suitings (1 ton), cotton gabardine (4 tons), turpentine (82 tons), corks (50 tons), cocoa butter (100 tons), mattress material (3 tons), cork tiling (26 tons), afgaline woollen material (1 ton), and a small parcel of forestry seeds.

British "Flame Defence" Against Invasion

MR. GEOFFREY LLOYD, British Minister of Information, yesterday told the inside story of the rumour which swept the world in the days when Britain stood alone—the story that a German invasion attempt of Britain had failed, because, with horrible results, the British "had consumed the invading hordes in a sea of fire."

He gave details of flame defences against invasion, and said that not only was there a great sea-flame barrier, but there was an infinitely more formidable land-flame barrier. "Flames," he said, "would have swept beaches, cliff defiles and roads and streamed down hillsides, and would have met paratroopers and aircraft as they landed."

The men primarily responsible for Britain's amazing flame defences at a time when she was without a well-equipped army were Mr. Lloyd and Lord Hankey, says the P.A.

If Britain had scanty armaments at that time, she had large petrol supplies, and Mr. Lloyd, who was then in charge of petroleum supplies at the Ministry of Fuel and Power, regarded those supplies as the weapons in his hand. He went to Lord Hankey, one of Britain's greatest defence experts, who before the 1914-18 war had carried out experiments burning petrol on water, an idea which was not taken up by the Army. They set about the task of getting the War Cabinet to adopt that and other ideas

They met with amazing success, and, beginning on Dumpton beach, near Deal, in the early summer of 1940, with an oil drum and a crude catapult—made by London firemen in their spare time — they revolutionised flame warfare

Their work led to the Wasp, the Churchill and the Crocodile flame-throwers, which helped the Allies to scorch their way into the heart of Germany.

Mr. Lloyd said the sea flame barrier was only one and the least important of the flame defences. The "flame of British resistance" was more than a symbolic expression.

"When the B.E.F. had been evacuated from Dunkirk, leaving most of their weapons behind them, it became of the utmost importance to improvise every possible means of stop-gap defences against an invading army," said Mr. Lloyd. Describing the origin of the Fougasse, he said: "I had heard of the Molotov Cocktail. I thought it is only a kind of petrol in a beer bottle, and I thought a more massive and more powerful oil weapon could be developed, so I got in touch with Lord Hankey, and we decided that we could not leave it to a committee of scientists, who might take months to investigate and more months to carry out suggestions.

"We went off and discussed it with the soldiers defending the Channel ports and we saw arranged fire obstacles at the defiles through the cliffs. Oil tanks were hid and pipes led from them to the defiles.

"Despite a terrific thunder and rainstorm, the first experiment was a success and delighted the soldiers.

"Next a petrol container was electrically exploded on the beach, and the tongue of flame shot 100 to 200 feet in the air."

The first lot of equipment was being assembled within ten days, and that was the first of a flood of weapons which were spread across the land to defend the coasts from Kent to Cornwall, and from Kent to Scotland.

The defile traps, which eventually produced a wall of flame 300 yards long, could be turned on and off at will and used repeatedly.

The fougasse was operated with units of 4 barrels each and were touched off with a button from an observation point 100 yards away—one ton of burning petrol exploded each time. To set the sea on fire, petrol pipes ran out from tanks ashore, and they exploded by the automatic release with the petrol of a calcium chemical which the water set alight.

A raiding German plane saw the first experiment and dive-bombed the experimenters, but the bombs fell wide. There was scarcely a subsequent flame experiment which was not seen by the Germans from the air.

Mr. Lloyd explained that the Germans tried similar defensive measures, "but when our experts saw them, after the landings in France, they regarded them as crude and incomparably inferior." He added that the rumour that a German attempt to invade Britain failed because the British set the sea aflame arose because the Germans—to prepare soldiers for invasion — clothed a number in asbestos suiting for sea flame exercises. "The Germans tried to harden their warriors by sending them in asbestos suits into a burning sea, but something went wrong with the headpieces and many casualties were suffered."

Deadlock at San Francisco

The sudden recall to Moscow of Mr. Sobolev, one of the principal Soviet delegates, puzzled the Conference at San Francisco yesterday.

A Russian spokesman said yesterday that Mr. Sobolev left on Friday, but declined to comment on the reasons for his recall.

The Conference, says Reuter, is now in a state of open deadlock among the "Big Three," with Russia on one side and Britain and the U.S. on the other. Russia insists that according to the Yalta formula the "Big Five" must have powers to veto even discussion of a dispute.

Britain and the U.S. are standing firm on the right of free discussion of disputes. At the present juncture the Conference leaders here are unable to see a way out of the impasse.—(Reuter.)

"BIG FOUR" MEET IN BERLIN

CORRESPONDENTS at Supreme Allied H.Q. report that General Eisenhower was proceeding to Berlin for the first meeting of the Allied Control Council, Luxembourg radio announced yesterday.

The Allied Control Commission to meet in Berlin to-day will consist of Field-Marshal Montgomery, General Eisenhower, Marshal Zhukov and General De Tassigny, Paris radio reported. It was previously stated that General Juin would be the French delegate.—(Associated Press.)

"No work, no food," is the order of the day in Berlin, according to a broadcast from Russian-controlled Berlin last night.

The radio said:—"In all districts offices have been set up to regulate the direction of labour. These offices are collecting former Nazis. Little Hitlers would like to forget to-day that for twelve years they used to make things so difficult for their fellow-citizens, their co-tenants and their colleagues at work that they replied with a threat to any remark suggesting criticism.

"A number of people are trying to shirk emergency work. At the next issue of food rations they may find that it would have been better to comply with the directions they were given."

Joyce's Companion in Brussels

The woman who was arrested with William Joyce ("Lord Haw Haw") flew to Brussels yesterday for further interrogation. Earlier it was announced that she would be going to England yesterday afternoon.

Joyce will remain at British Second Army headquarters for a few more days and will probably be flown to England in mid-week. When the woman boarded the machine taking her to Brussels, she exclaimed: "Thank God that's over."

Pope Denounces Nazi-ism

BROADCASTING from the Vatican on Saturday, the Pope claimed that before and during the war the Catholic Church stood out against the Nazi régime.

"Nobody," he said, "could charge the Church with not having exposed the real nature of National Socialism, and the fundamental opposition between it and the Catholic Church. During the war we never ceased to oppose the inexorable application of the National Socialist doctrine. Nor were these exertions wholly fruitless.

"If the leaders of Germany were determined to destroy the Church, Providence decreed otherwise. The tribulations of the Church at the hands of National Socialism were ended with the sudden, tragic end of the persecutor," he declared.

The Pope said that in 1933 the German Government invited the Holy See to conclude a Concordat. "The Church did not expect much from such a Concordat, but it promised some advantage.

"The fight against the Church grew more and more bitter, and there followed increasing persecution and suppression of Catholic schools, conscription of youth and coercion of conscience. Religious houses were closed down, dissolved and confiscated. Catholic publications were annihilated.

"As the veil which concealed the sad passion of the Church under the National Socialist régime is lifted it becomes plain with what fortitude, even to death, countless Catholics stood up and what glorious share the clergy had in it. Although complete statistical data are not yet available, We cannot refrain from mentioning here one or two of the pitiful instances brought to notice by priests and laymen from the camp of Dachau.

"First in number and severity of treatment were the Polish priests.

"Between 1940 and 1945, 2,800 Polish ecclesiastics and religious persons were interned at Dachau. By last April there remained only 816. The others, except two or three who were transferred to other camps, had all died.

"Unspeakable sufferings were endured by those ecclesiastics and laymen for their faith and vocation.

"In one case the impious, in their hatred against Christ, went so far as to stage a parody of the Redeemer by flogging an interned priest, on whose head they had placed a thorny crown made of barbed wire.

"May the just Judge accept German suffering as atonement of their wrongdoing, and may the German nation, in arising from the abyss, find the true way in humility," the Pope declared.

THE FUTURE

Referring to the future, the Pope said: "The road from the truce of arms to a real peace will be long and arduous. Before such peace is achieved millions of people will have to taste the bitterness of the cup. To-day there is peace—but what a fragile peace!

"The nations, especially the small and medium, claim that their destinies be left in their own hands. They have a right to refuse to have a new political and cultural system forced upon them. They hold, and not without right, that the principal task of organisers of peace is to put an end to the criminal play of war and to defend the vital rights and mutual obligations of the strong and the weak.

"We must not lose heart. Pronouncements by competent and responsible men in the last few weeks make us think that the victory of right is in view, not only as a political aim, but also as an aim they consider it their moral duty to attain."

Stating that the world to-day is stunned as it surveys the ruins, and that they who take up the sword shall perish by the sword, the Pope referred to years spent among the German people, when he "learned to know the great qualities of the German nation.

"We are, therefore," he declared, "confident that Germany may arise again to a new dignity and a new life, after banishing the satanic spectre of National Socialism, and after the guilty have expiated their crimes."

The Most Rev. Dr. Browne, Bishop of Galway, referring yesterday to the Pope's broadcast, said that there was a lamentable shortage of priests in many countries, because they had been made the object of persecution. "This was the age of martyrdom for priests in many parts of the world," he said.

Red Star Line Owners' Claim

Mr. Arnold M. Bernstein, former owner of the Red Star Shipping Line, has filed a suit in New York for 4,800,000 dollars (£1,200,000) against the Holland-America Line to recover assets alleged to have been taken from him by the Nazis in 1939, it has been disclosed by the New York Federal Court.

The suit recalls the sensational trial in Hamburg of Mr. Bernstein and five directors of his firm, four of them described as Jews, on various trumped-up charges in connection with foreign exchange regulations under Goering's special law. He was sentenced to two and a half years' penal servitude and fined 1,000,000 marks (about £80,000). Even this heavy fine was only part of the Public Prosecutor's original demand of 4,500,000 marks (£360,000).

After his arrest the Red Star Line and the Arnold Bernstein Line were placed in the charge of a Nazi-appointed trustee, "to ensure the undisturbed operation of the undertakings concerned," it was reported at the time.—(Reuter.)

Berlin to Honour "Camp" Victims

Dr. Wehrner, Lord Mayor of Berlin, announced that the Berlin authorities have decided to build a home in honour of victims released from concentration camps, Berlin Radio said yesterday.—(Reuter.)

Fate in Manila Of Irish Priest

An official report has been received in Dublin which makes, it seem certain that Brother Xavier Kelly, of Baltinglass, Co. Wicklow, was murdered in Manila by Japanese soldiers last February. The information has come from Washington to the Department of External Affairs.

The Japanese raided the De La Salle College, on the outskirts of Manila, of which Brother Xavier was the Superior. It is thought that 17 of the Brothers were massacred, as nothing has since been heard of them, while it has been established beyond doubt that Brother Xavier was taken out to be shot. It is believed that most of the 17 men were Americans.

Brother Xavier, a distinguished educationist, went out to the Phillipines about 30 years ago, as a young man. He received his early training in Dublin. It is understood that the Irish Provincial of the De La Salle Order, has made a request through the American Red Cross for information from Father Cosgrave, C.SS.R., who was a survivor of the massacre.

During the masacre 60 of the 70 civilians, who were interned in the College, and were bayoneted to death, ten escaped by feigning death.

Okinawa Situation Critical —TOKYO REPORT

ABOUT 170 carrier-based U.S. planes attacked Southern Kyushu, the southernmost island of Japan, yesterday for the second time in 24 hours, according to a Tokyo broadcast, states a New York (Reuter) report. In 14 formations the planes struck targets in the Miyazaki and Kagoshima prefectures, the Radio said.

United States infantry have only half a mile to go to cut off the neck of the Chinen Peninsula on Okinawa Island, which will give them control of Nakagusugu Bay and islands, once the anchorage of the Japanese Fleet.

An Associated Press message says that U.S. forces are attacking the east coast of Southern Okinawa to cut the Japanese communications between Naha and Shuri. Tokyo Radio announced yesterday, adding that violent fighting continues and that "the situaion is hourly becoming critical."

Admiral Spruance, Fifth Fleet Commander, according to the Associated Press, is reported to have stated that the naval casualties of the U.S. Fleet at Okinawa have been the greatest in any of the Fleet's operations.

Reuter message from Melbourne states that fighting has flared up at Dove Bay, east of Wewak, New Guinea. Dove Bay was the scene of the Australian commando landings which outflanked the Wewak garrison. Bitter fighting is reported north and south of Bougainville.

New landings on Mindanao, announced by General MacArthur yesterday, are part of a determined effort to clean up the Philippines along with the clearing of Okinawa, and thus to release new forces for the attack on Japan itself. The landings were made 75 miles south of Davao city and on the west coast. With the island already cut in two, the Japanese are being pushed into the hills, where General MacArthur's men aim at surrounding them.

American troops, aided by Philippine guerillas, have forced the Japanese out of their defences anchored to the towns of Ula Alhambra and Bayabas, north-west of Davao City, in the island of Mindinao. General MacArthur's communique stated yesterday.

Deep wedges have been driven into the Japanese defences west of Davao. American troops in Luzon have reached points four miles north of Santafe.

Persia Hopes Allied Troops Will Go

The hope that Allied troops would soon leave the country was expressed in the Persian Parliament yesterday by the Prime Minister, who outlined the Government's policy, and was given a vote of confidence, said Teheran radio last night.

The withdrawal of those troops whose mission has been completed would enable the Government to extend the central authority to the whole country and settle down to a state of security and order, it was stated.—(Reuter.)

"STRAW VOTE" PAPERS IN THE POST

THOUSANDS of voters in all parts of the country will receive by post, to-day or to-morrow, invitations to take part in the Irish Times "straw vote" on the Presidential election.

A reproduction of the invitation is printed in adjoining columns. The names of the candidates are on a detachable post-card, which is already stamped and addressed. All the recipient has to do is fill in the figures 1, 2, and 3—or 1 and 2—opposite the candidates' names, detach the card and place it in the nearest pillar-box.

It is important that the cards should be posted for return as early as possible. If those who receive the cards show a spirit of co-operation the figures revealed by the "straw vote" should constitute a very interesting forecast of the result of the Presidential election, which takes place on June 14th.

The fact that the papers have been sent to voters chosen absolutely at random from the registers of the various constituencies should ensure that they represent a much fairer cross-section of the population than if they had been selected in accordance with a preconceived scheme.

No "straw vote" on the result of an election ever before was taken in this country, and, as far as we are aware, none ever was taken in Great Britain. Consequently, apart form the purpose of the "vote" as an indication of how the actual election may result, there is widespread interest in its reception by the Irish people. If the response is poor, such a method of endeavouring to find what Irish opinion is may never again be tried; if the response, on the other hand, is encouraging, there may be frequent use of similar types of "votes," or of inquiries on the lines of the Gallup Polls in America, to discover what the people generally are thinking and

The "Irish Times" is asking a number of voters, chosen at random from the registers of all constituencies, to indicate whom they would prefer as next President. Their replies, it is hoped, will serve as a guide to the way the election will go. You are asked to insert the figures 1, 2 and 3 against the names on the attached post-card in the order of your choice and to post it without delay. As you can see, the card bears no mark by which it would be possible to identify any "voter." Thanks for your help.

Insert the figures 1, 2 and 3 against the candidates' names, in the order of your preference:—

without Calomel and you'll jump out of bed in the morning full of fun and vigour. The liver should pour out two pints of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas blows up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sunk, and the world looks punk.

Laxative pills and purges are but mere bowel movement. They don't get to the cause. It takes these good old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get those two pints of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up". Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Stubbornly refuse anything else. 1/3 and 3/-.

HIGHLAND REEL WINS CLEVERLY

GOLDEN PRINCE very nearly won the £500 hurdle race at the Phœnix Park on Saturday. He was collared in the straight, and jumping the second last hurdle there was scarcely a length between him, the raging favourite — Airy Prince — Pongo, Mylerstown and Highland Reel. Still, Golden Prince ran on kindly for Newman, and, landing in front over the last, he promised to win, until Highland Reel, under the whip, overhauled him in the last few strides, and beat him cleverly by a neck.

J. Tyrell, a recent recruit to the ranks of fully-fledged jockeys, rode the winner of both the two-year-old races. In the Brook Plate Silver Thistle, Lady's Pack, Some Treasure and Golden Fay were almost in line at half-way, but below the distance Silver Thistle spurted into a clear lead and then readily withstood a determined challenge from the lightly-framed Idle Talk.

Mr. Ussher, to whom Tyrell was apprenticed, owns the racy-looking Lady Behave, winner of the maiden two-year-old race. It was evident some way from home that the race rested between her and the Diplomat filly, Dulcinea. The latter failed to cope with her speed in the last furlong, and Lady Behave won going away by a length.

Mr. McGrath, his trainer, M. C. Collins, and his jockey, Mornington Wing, had won two races at the Curragh. They repeated that performance on Saturday when the four-year-olds, Hello Peter and Colomb's Kingdom won their respective events. Colomb's Kingdom has now won 5½ races for Mr. McGrath.

MANY CHAMPIONSHIPS CHANGE HANDS

By T. W. MURPHY

MANY new names appear on the Amateur Athletic Union (Eire) championship list by reason of the meeting held in the College Park, Dublin, on Saturday. Of the twelve senior championships decided, no less than eight new title-holders come into the list, though some of them had previously won championship honours.

In most cases the change was due to the absence of holders, as only in five events did the holders take the field. In four of them the holders were successful. L. N. Horan (Hermes) retained the shot-putting and discus championships. O'Rafferty (Donore) took the high jump championship for the ninth successive year, and B. Healion (Erris) also had a ninth successive victory with the hammer. Incidentally, it may be remarked that O'Rafferty and Healion had had a lease of their respective events since the formation of the Union in 1937. O'Rafferty did 6ft., but failed to add to that height; while Healion threw the hammer 176ft. 6¼ins., which, though considerably below his best, is quite a respectable throw, and would win many an international competition. Despite many showers, the programme was run through with the clock-like precision we expect from the A.A.U.

Burke Just Fails to Equal Record

By J. P. ROONEY

ANYTHING could happen to-day to upset calculations, but yesterday's aggregate for the two rounds of the East of Ireland golf championship at Balrray were headed by the popular fancy, John Burke, who, following a rather indifferent 76, found his true form, and, with 72, the best round of the day, barely missed equalling the corresponding record of 71 standing to the credit of James Bruen and Kevin Garvey. By doing so, he led the former holders, Joseph Carr, Kevin Troy and John Fitzsimons by five strokes, and, but for lapses in the short 14th and 16th on his second round, Burke would have had a perfect round.

There was nothing brilliant about his first round, except his three at the 400 yards (bogey 5) sixth, his two at the 16th and three at the (bogey 5) eighteenth, but his 72 was a model of consistency and excellent golf. He was out in 35 (3 bogey) and home in 37, with birdies in the 3rd, 6th and 7th, his figures borne being eight fours and a five.

The features of the first round were the 74s of Fitzsimmons, a former holder of the Irish Amateur Open Championship, which he won just before the war at Dollymount, and that most promising young Sutton player, M. P. Fitzpatrick, but both fell behind in the afternoon, the Ulsterman with 79 and Fitzpatrick with 80. Fitzpatrick, with 154, has a chance. The holder, J. W. Hulme, of Warrenpoint, may be regarded as out of the running with 160.

Carr's putting was rather erratic in the morning, the result being a 79. His 74 in the afternoon, under the circumstances, was a really fine recovery. Troy's morning round of 77 was just steady golf, but had he been certain with his short putts in the evening, hi 76 would have been much better.

Of the younger players, about the best is M. Ferguson, Greenore, a brother of the Lucan professional, who finished well up with the leaders with 155, despite three "sixes" on the fine holes, the 18th, when he was down in three.

148—J. Burke (Lahinch), 76-72.
153—P. Carr (Sutton), 79-74; K. Troy (Royal Dublin), 77-76; J. Fitzsimons (Bushfoot), 74-79.

159—R. McConkey (Dundalk), 77-82; D. Somers (Laytown), 81-78; F. M. Burke (Cill Dara), 81-78.
164—J. W. Hulme (Warrenpoint), 77-87; J. Malone (Dun Laoghaire), 81-79; J. Lyons (Kilkenny), 79-81.

CLOSE CHAMPIONSHIPS IN SOUTH?

The Ulster Branch of the Golf Union of Ireland met on Friday to consider the proposal to hold the Close Championship in the North this year, but the decision was, writes our Golf Correspondent, that they did not consider it feasible, owing to the scarcity of balls, rationing and lack of boots and boardinghouse accommodation. I was not able to ascertain at Balrray what the branch's decision was as to the holding of the championships in the South, but when the report of the meeting reaches Mr. Kidd and the Centra' Council considers the matter an official decision will be come to.

There is no reason why the championships should not be held in the South, and that probably will be the view of the Council.

GREATER DUBLIN

Next week's municipal elections will give the people of Dublin an opportunity to deal with issues of far more than local importance. It will be their duty to decide whether this country's premier local authority is to become a mere instrument to register the decrees of a political party and the victim of State-controlled bureaucracies, or whether a serious effort is to be made to restore the traditional prestige and independence of Dublin City Council and its surrounding local authorities. Viewed from its broader aspects, the result of next week's elections will have a two-fold significance. If the citizens of Dublin tamely submit to the crack of Fianna Fail's party whip, there can be little hope that other bodies of local representatives will be able to resist the rapidly rising tides of party and bureaucratic dictatorship; and the country at large will be called on to pay the penalties that are inevitable if the people of the capital city and county display indifference to the organisation of services that are of vital importance to the country's whole structure of industrial and community life. That, as we believe, is some measure of the special responsibilities which rest immediately on the shoulders of Dublin's citizens. It is their duty and their privilege to lead the whole country towards a new and saner conception of local administration and a higher standard of public health and well-being. Now, as never before, there are both an opportunity and an exigent need to call up the reserves of public spirit, and capacity for public service, which have been submerged too long in the turbulent waters of party strife. Now, as we believe, is the moment at which to recruit local authorities whose sense of responsibility and independence will provide the reserves from which new blood will be drawn to reinvigorate the national Legislature.

Mr. de Valera and his Cabinet colleagues have expressed their agreement with the view that local councils are an indispensable training ground for parliamentary and administrative duties. What pass comprehension are the means by which they propose to control such processes of education. Primarily, and above all other considerations, they say that eligible candidates must enter as pledge-bound members of a political party. In no other sense is it possible to interpret the declarations of Ministers or the appeals of their nominees for election So regimented, the least competent Fianna Fail nominee is to be preferred to a candidate who has proved his capacity to deal with questions of housing, public health and the many-sided problems of local administration Surely, however, sauce that is deemed to be good for the gander ought not to be denounced as poison for the goose. Would Mr. de Valera be willing to concede to Fine Gael or the Labour Party the privileges which he now demands for Fianna Fail? Is it not quite certain that former denunciations of party domination in local councils would again be heard if the divorce suited the book of Fianna Fail's election organisers? Clearly the issue is between principle and expediency No sophistry or special pleading can conceal that choice from voters who have an intelligent grasp of the practical issues to be determined at next week's elections. On what principles, then, ought voters' preferences to be expressed? First, as we think, comes the broad principle that party labels should be disregarded, and support accorded to condidates whose independence of mind and character offer the least prospect of possible subservience to party or bureaucratic decrees. Such a choice may be difficult to make, but one thing at least is clear. There cannot be too many party-free members of the new Councils of Dublin and Dun Laoghaire.

Other considerations that well may influence the minds of voters will call for a review of recent changes in the organisation of local government in Dublin City and County. Of outstanding importance is the fact that Ministers —acting in complete disregard of the considered advice given by the Greater Dublin Tribunal— have resorted to a series of arbitrary and patchwork expedients in their efforts to conceal the failure of three recent Acts that were designed to provide Greater Dublin with a new system of local administration. In all cases, these expedients have led to the suspension of control by local representatives and to the concentration of authority in the Department of Local Government and its specially nominated officials. Concurrently, and in line with, a long series of steps completely to suppress local initiative and authority, the impression has gone abroad that such local representatives as remain in office are little more than registrars of Customs House decrees, promulgated through the agency of a City and County Manager. The collective effect of all these steps —such as the continued suppression of the County Council and the Board of Public Assistance, and considerable transfers of local powers to a Parliamentary Secretary—has been to spread the belief that all local representatives soon will be treated as transient and embarrassed phantoms — to appear, or to disappear, at the will and pleasure of Ministers and party organisers. If it is the fate of local representative bodies to play the part of puppets in the hands of Ministers and officials, they cannot disappear too soon. Then deputies and senators no longer could take refuge in the illusion that members of county and city councils have any real responsibility for the conduct of local affairs. Parliamentary control, of which there is little present evidence, then might become a reality. Much as we would deplore this suppression of local influence, it would be preferable to the maintenance of sham democracies. If that is the view of the majority of Dublin's citizens, next week's elections give them the chance to open a new chapter in the history of Irish local government.

Jew-baiting

The House of Commons must have been staggered by the motion recently put down by the Conservative member, Captain Ramsay—who, it will be recalled, was interned during the war, under Regulation 18B. His motion demands that the Statute of Jewry, which imposed disabilities upon the Jewish population of Britain, and was rescinded in 1846, should be reintroduced. It hardly will be necessary to point out that this motion proposes to establish in Britain one of the ideals over which it was supposed that victory had been won.. Anti-Semitism was an essential element in the Nazi ideology. It is, indeed, a very usual foundation-stone for any demagogic movement; for every revolutionary will agree that it is much easier to inflame the passions of the people against something than to arouse their enthusiasm for something. Because of their difference in religion and in customs, because of their undoubted acumen and ability, the Jews are regarded with suspicion and jealousy in almost every country. Even in Dublin there are the seeds—fortunately, as we believe, not very potent seeds—of a movement against them. There is no reason for the emotions that produce such a movement. It springs from the primitive distrust of anything unusual. Efforts to prove the activities of the Jews anti-social are so miserably inadequate that they can deceive only a street-corner crowd. The civilised man realises that Jews are just as good citizens as anybody else; that they produce no more criminals and miscreants than anybody else; that, on the other hand, they produce a higher proportion of musicians and artists of all kinds than anybody else; and that, in a democratic State, they are as much entitled to practise their religion as anybody else. Anti-Semitism dies hard. The defeat of Germany evidently has not killed it; and it is the concern of every thinking man to see that it is not allowed to provide the foundation for another Nazi State. The House of Commons, we feel, can be trusted to deal with Captain Ramsay's motion.

CORK STREET HOSPITAL

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES

SIR,—Lest the speech of the Minister for Local Government, as reported, should cause any confusion in the minds of the public, we wish to make it quite clear that the 39-page document to which the Minister refers was prepared by his Department, and is completely and entirely distinct from the withheld Report of the Inspector who conducted the Inquiry, to which it does not even refer.

An Inspector holding a sworn Inquiry is bound to conduct it on legal principles, to hear all relevant evidence, to consider its weight in the light of the demeanour of the witnesses, and to embody his findings of fact in a Report to the Minister. The Minister may then properly take action on such Report.

This Report of the Inspector has not been made available to the public, nor even to members of the Board. We again challenge the Minister to produce it. We believe the Inspector was impartial. We are convinced that he could not do otherwise than find in favour of the Board. We re-assert our belief that the Minister must have ignored the Inspector's findings of fact, and that his action is in the teeth of such findings.

The 39-page document mentioned by the Minister is not a report, but a letter from the Secretary of the Department to the new Commissioner. It was not sent to the Press at the time or made public, though copies of it were belatedly circulated to members of the dissolved Board. It is a purely departmental production which ignores the findings of the Inspector, and we believe, is contrary to such findings. It is quite plainly an exculpatory document, attempting to justify a proceeding, which is, in our view, unjustifiable.

The Minister stated in the Dail that the whole evidence concerning the dissolution of the Board is contained in this document. What is the truth? The Inquiry lasted eight full days. The document contains less than eighteen pages of extracts from the evidence affecting the conduct of the Board, the taking of which extracts would have occupied about two hours. It appears to us that the extracts are selected to present only one view, as there is no reference to the mass of contrary evidence produced. The remaining 21 pages consist of evidence on a private disagreement between doctors, unknown to the Board, and finally the purported summaries, conclusions, directions and threats of the Parliamentary Secretary. We challenge the impartiality of the summaries and the legitimacy of the conclusions.

Does the Minister suggest that among his many duties he has found time to read all the evidence given at the Inquiry. Does he suggest that if he had done so, he would be in as good a position to come to conclusions of fact as his own inspector who conducted the Inquiry and saw the demeanour of the witnesses? Or does he admit that he took arbitrary executive action completely inconsistent with the judicial findings of his own inspector? If so, let him say so. If not, let him publish the full report of the inspector, or at least make it available to all members of the Oireachtas. If his action is in conformity with the report, he can have no objection to its being made public. If he refuses, there is only one conclusion to be drawn.

Again we demand the inspector's report, particularly in view of the grave reflection made by the Minister's action upon our personal integrity and capacity.—Yours, etc.,

NEUTRALITY

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES

SIR,—The fact that the late war against Germany was represented to the British public, among other things, as a crusade, is regarded by your correspondent, "F.H.G.," as providing only another "bitter illustration of the ignoble shifts necessary to manage the passions and prejudices of mass democracy." Surely "F.H.G." must be very ill-informed of the state of feeling and knowledge as it existed in the British public, prior to the declaration of war.

The man in the street not only agreed that Britain was bound to honour her pledges to Poland, but was well aware of the peril which Nazidom represented, not only to his own safety and liberty, but also to the democratic way of life in the world in general. The results of the Nazi system in Germany itself—the destruction of liberty and religion, the cruel persecutions of the Jews and anti-Nazis—were well known to him. No "ignoble shifts" were necessary to persuade him or the thousands of Irishmen who, to their honour, were like-minded with him, that Britain's war against Nazidom was not only a fight for his own safety and liberty, but was also a "crusade against an evil thing."

"F.H.G." may thank God for this crusading spirit; for, largely because of it, not only was civilisation saved, but Eire and "F.H.G." himself, from the direst peril that ever threatened the human race.—Yours, etc.,

H. LESLIE PARKER.

FILM NOTES

BY OUR CINEMA CORRESPONDENT

HOLLYWOOD'S attitude towards the great composers is composed of a curious mixture of wide-eyed awe and vulgar disrespect. The practice of going to hear classical music is regarded as a "corney" affectation; a composer's life, however, is regarded as an acceptable subject for dignified tragedy of the most superior kind.

Columbia's life of Chopin, entitled A Song to Remember because it was felt that any reference to the composer in the title would kill the film's chances at the box-office, rises to great heights by steering a middle course and by assuming that Chopin's music, as written by Chopin, is worth hearing. The composer's beautiful waltzes, nocturnes and polonaises are supplied with exceptional generosity, and the temptation to orchestrate has been righteously avoided—if one overlooks the incidental playing of the melody now known as So Deep is "The Night" when Chopin is introduced to George Sand. The theoretical star of this film—which is showing at the Adelphi—is that dyed-in-the-wool "ham," Mr. Paul Muni, who gives Chopin's music teacher the same mannerisms that he has attributed in the past to hosts of other characters. Merle Oberon, looking much more attractively feminine than George Sand ever tried to be, plays this curious literary genius with dignity and intelligence. Chopin is impersonated by Cornel Wilde, who had a small part in "The Light of Heart," and although he makes the composer somewhat boyishly ingenuous, his is a most pleasing performance. The real star of the film, however, is José Iturbi, who is, in fact, playing the piano even when we see Mr. Wilde's fingers on the keys.

It may transpose a cliché, "A Song to Remember" is a feast for the ears.

San Diego, I Love You (Theatre Royal) was designed by its makers, Universal, as an economic pot-boiler made entirely on "stock" talent. It has astonished all concerned by turning into what may easily prove to be the best romantic comedy of 1945. Its story is slight, its "gags" are unspectacular, but the treatment by players and director is full of those gently humorous touches that can be suggested only by imagination and experience. Edward Everett Horton gets a long-deserved opportunity as an inventor of feckless devices, and Louise Allbritton is delightful in a Rosalind Russellesque rôle. Old-timer Buster Keaton's brief appearance as a bus driver must be seen to be relished. I strongly commend this inspired farce.

Thousands Cheer (Savoy), M.G.M.'s technicoloured all-star show, seems to have been indefinitely delayed en route from Britain. The background "story" is completely out of date, and seems to have reached this country a shade too soon to avoid mutilation by the censor. A concentrated barrage of cutting has deprived us, among other things, of Kathryn Grayson singing Dmitri Shostakovitch's "Allied Hymn of Victory," specially written for the film by the Russian composer. Even the high art was given hard days! On the whole, however, the film is good, rowdy entertainment—particularly the sketch in which Frank Morgan submits Ann Sothern, Lucilla Ball and Marsha Hunt to a medical examination. Other attractions include a typical song from Judy Garland, some fine trapeze work by the Flying Corbinos and a brief cross-talk between Red Skelton and little Margaret O'Brien.

The House of Fear (Carlton) is an ingenious mystery thriller that seems to think it is based upon Conan Doyle's "Adventure of the Five Orange Pips." Sherlock Holmes, Dr. Watson and the orange pips are the only features that the two stories have in common. The other characters, the setting and the nature of the crime have been changed out of all recognition. The new story, however, is not at all bad. Basil Rathbone flies through his part with the greatest of ease, and Nigel Bruce as Watson comes dutifully plodding in his wake. Babes on Swing Street—attractive title!—are an infinitely more tolerable affair than one might presume. Admittedly, on the debit side it has Andy Devine, Ann Blythe and Freddie Slack and his orchestra. Peggy Ryan, Leon Errol and June Preisser, however, balance things off in the right direction.
